Sketch of the Great Fires in Wisconsin

Frank Tilton

The Peshtigo fire in Northeastern Wisconsin is the deadliest wildfire in recorded history, claiming somewhere between 1200 and 2500 lives. It burned between 1.2 and 1.5 million acres. It took place on October 8, 1871, and gets little notice because that was the same day as the Great Chicago Fire, which claimed around 300 lives and burned about 2000 acres.

After giving a general description of the area, Tilton provides details of the fire and firefighting efforts, together with descriptions of the damage done. He gathered many firsthand accounts. They are terrifying. He concludes with a very heartening chapter detailing the aid received from around the state and country and from Europe. Cash contributions alone totaled around $350,000, the equivalent of about $8 million in 2024.
